FARA Friedreich's Ataxia Research Alliance

Bring The Highest Road to Your Community

When we made this film, the goal wasn't just to tell a story about one ride or one person reaching the top of a mountain. It was to capture something I've seen over and over again in the FA community: what can happen when people come together around a shared purpose.

The progress we've seen in FA research didn't come from a single breakthrough. It came from people choosing to take part. Families joined research studies. Scientists dedicated their careers to understanding FA. Volunteers organized events. Donors invested in the work. Communities showed up.

Together, they've helped move the field farther than many thought possible.

Today, there is an FDA-approved treatment for individuals with FA aged 16 and older. Research is underway at sites around the world, and scientists continue to learn more about FA and explore new paths that may shape future treatments.

But there is still more to do. Important questions remain, and families are counting on continued progress.

That's why these screenings matter. Every screening introduces new people to the FA community and helps raise the support needed to move research forward.

The story in this film isn't finished, and neither is the story of FA research.

If you'd like to host a screening in your community, FARA can provide planning resources, fundraising tools, and support along the way. Invite your friends, family, coworkers, and neighbors. Start a conversation. Share the story. Help write the next chapter of progress in FA research.

Host a Screening.
Bring People Together.

Across the country, members of the FA community are using this film to gather friends, family, coworkers, neighbors, schools, faith communities, and local groups. Some screenings happen in living rooms, some take place in community centers.

A Shared Goal

As screenings take place around the country, we're working together toward a collective fundraising goal of $500,000 for FA research. That number isn't just a fundraising target. It's an investment in the next phase of progress.

No single event will get us there on its own. But that's never been how the FA community works.

We've always made progress because lots of people chose to do something.

The film is a tool to continue that momentum. And the more communities that get involved, the more momentum we create together.
